The autobiographers of our present volume, those born between 1778 and 1800 have little more to tell us of the great French Revolution. They were children in the days of its inception, and with most of them the active masterwork of life had scarce begun before Napoleons downfall. Hence we have here to deal with hut a single French autobiography. In a way, however, this one is the most tragic of all the revolutionary stories. It is the narrative of the little daughter of the ill-fated King Louis XVI and his queen, Marie Antoinette. The parents were guillotined in the Revolution; but was not their little daughters fate more terrible? Imprisoned with her parents, her aunt and her little brother, this unhappy child saw them dragged away from her one by one. First went the king, her father; then her haughty Austrian mother so hated of the populace; then her gentle, deeply religious aunt; then her melancholy brother so stupefied by persecution that he seemed scarcely sane. And the poor daughter, Marie Therese, was old enough to understand just what each departure meant, and bade wailing adieu to each of her loved ones, her natural protectors, while waiting for her summons to come next. The grim tragedy she saw, and much of what she felt, the poor child jotted down in this pathetic journal, over which many a tender soul has since wept piteously. Marie Therese kept no journal of those later years after 1815, when the remnants of her family had been restored to power, her uncle being king as Louis XVIII and she herself married to a royal prince. But other writers have told us that she never forgot - as alas how could she forget - that even in extreme old age, as late as 1850, she still lived in the horror of the past, still trembled at the memory of those childhood days, of which she tells with such simple and convincing childishness. About the Publisher Forgotten Books publishes hundreds of thousands of rare and classic books.
