

The Chalk Cliffs: A child's lost toy on a sea of lies, desperation, and love

Set in the recession of the 1980s a desperate young couple make a pact to kill themselves and their two daughters at the end of one last magical seaside holiday. In the course of that week, as the suspense builds and they confront every assumption they have ever made about themselves, and each other, the traumatic pasts they have inherited are revealed, and they begin to understand that some experiences are so terrible they cannot be resolved in one lifetime but are handed down through generations. Seen through the eyes of the youngest daughter, Thecla Milner, this is a story about the meaning of survival, the fragility of adulthood, and most of all, - a child's determination to live. To quote from one of the reviews: There are no easy outs and there is nothing predictable about this book. Don't miss it. And another: The plot is potentially a disturbing one but it packs such humanity and humour in it, you actually feel uplifted. And a third: It is probably one of the most powerfully emotional books I've read recently. And a third: I was captivated...the story inexorably moves ahead catching the reader in its suspenseful wake.
